- A4. Economic shift from industrialization or industries to high-technology operations or advanced manufacturing
- A5. Urban growth stimulated specialization and specialized centers outside the central business district (CBD)
- A6. Suburbs took on the roles more typically associated with CBDs
- A7. Cheaper, more available, and easier to develop land in suburban areas
- A8. Shifts in the spatial organization of production or the spatial organization of manufacturing
- A9. Lack of planning or reduced regulation of land use in the urban periphery or unincorporated areas

B. Describe TWO ways that the spatial organization of commercial land use is different between the original CBD and an edge city. (2 points)

	Original CBD	Edge City
B.	1. High-density buildings and/or land use; skyscrapers	a. Low density buildings and/or land use; low-rise office buildings, “campus” architecture
B.	2. Mixed land use (residential, commercial, office)	b. Specialized land use; dedicated to office buildings and retailing (little to no residential land use)
B.	3. More walkable, pedestrian oriented	c. Pedestrian unfriendly (lack of sidewalks)
B.	4. Smaller shops and retail	d. Big box stores
B.	5. Older, more historic	e. Newer construction

- C2. Loss of natural and/or animal habitats, introduction of invasive or nonnative species
- C3. Dependence on automobile or lack of public transportation can result in increased air pollution and greenhouse gas emissions or a larger carbon footprint
- C4. Impact on land because low-density development occupies more land than a high-density development (more land used for roads, larger building footprints)
- C5. Lack of parks, green spaces, and trees causes heat island effect
- C6. Numerous roads and parking lots absorb heat and contribute to the heat island effect
- C7. Waste, soil erosion, or pollution from construction sites
- C8. More impervious surfaces created by new construction (buildings, roads, parking lots) cause more storm water runoff and flooding
